We already learned that the complete subject is the main word (noun or pronoun) of a sentence, plus all of the words that tell whom or what the sentence is about.

- The quarterback for our team threw the ball downfield.
- A little fuzzy bunny hopped across the backyard.
- The sleek red dragster with yellow flames roared down the racetrack.
- The towering roller coaster is the tallest one on the East Coast.

The simple subject of a sentence is the main word minus all of the describing words that go along with it.

- The quarterback for our team threw the ball downfield.
- A little fuzzy bunny hopped across the backyard.
- The sleek red dragster with yellow flames was louder than thunder.
- The towering roller coaster is the tallest one on the East Coast.

We also learned that the complete predicate is the main verb of a sentence plus all of the words that tell what the subject is, what the subject does or did, or what happened to the subject.

- The quarterback for our team threw the ball downfield.
- A little fuzzy bunny hopped across the backyard.
- The sleek red dragster with yellow flames was louder than thunder.
- The towering roller coaster is the tallest one on the East Coast.

The simple predicate of a sentence is the main verb minus all of the describing words that go along with it.

- The quarterback for our team (threw) the ball downfield.
- A little fuzzy bunny hopped across the backyard.
- The sleek red dragster with yellow flames was louder than thunder.
- The towering roller coaster (is) the tallest one on the East Coast.